« Il faut changer cet état d'esprit colonial » : à Casablanca, la révolte des banques africaines

Priorité donnée par les Etats aux banques étrangères, interférences politiques... Après les cris de victoire, les champions bancaires du continent réunis à l'Africa Financial Summit pointent les limites du système africain suite au désengagement des banques occidentales.

“THIS JOURNEY IS A MARATHON”

The recurring sentiment across our discussions at AFIS is one of conviction: Africa’s transformation is happening, and the financial sector is central to this story. While challenges remain, the progress is undeniable and the financial sector is an essential ingredient to this story, a lead player in that transformation. I personally think the integration of African markets will happen only if the financial sector takes the lead.

Looking ahead, two concerns stand out:

- The pursuit of perfection often delays necessary reforms. The search for perfection, the habit of holding back reforms until we have the “perfect” reform package. That’s not the right way to do it. We cannot wait for the “perfect” package to act.
- Political factors can be obstacles. While we must address these challenges, they cannot be allowed to stall progress.

This journey is a marathon, not a sprint. We must plant seeds today, even if others reap the benefits in the future. We should boldly plant what can be planted even if it's not us, but those who come later, that will be the ones doing the harvesting.

Patrick Njoroge

Chairman, AFIS Supervisory Council
Former Governor,
Central Bank of Kenya
